DIED AT CAMP LEE

Two More Golden Stars Added to the Full a Count's Service Flag.

Victims of Influenza. We are too apt to think that glory belongs alone to the soldier who gives his life on the field of battle in the midst of smoke and the roar of cannon; but the boy who closes his eyes to the visions of a successful business career, dons the khaki, and goes into a training camp, there to prepare for any sacrifice his country may demand, and there succumbs to disease over which he has no control, is every inch a patriot, and is deserving of the everlasting gratitude of his countrymen.

During the past week, two Fulton County boys at Camp Lee, fell victims to the dread scourge, Spanish Influenza that is now prostrating so many thousands all over the country. The first to give his life in this way was John Leroy Fleming who went to Camp Lee on the last Friday in July, and he passed away last Friday evening. His remains escorted by a soldier, reached Fort Loudon on Sunday, and it was conveyed to the home of his mother, Mrs. T. S. Fleming at Clear Ridge, where the funeral was held on Tuesday morning.

The second, was Howard Kirk, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Kirk, of Taylor township, who passed last Sunday morning. His remains reached Three Springs on Tuesday evening, and the funeral will take place at the home of his parents this morning. Mr. Fleming was aged about 32, and Mr. Kirk about 28.

Spanish Influenza.

Spanish Influenza has the eastern cities in its grip, and the malady is gradually working its way westward. It is reported that there are 186,000 cases in Philadelphia, and business in that city is paralyzed. Much the same condition prevails in Boston, New York, Baltimore and the inland cities of the east. 1300 cases are reported in Franklin County, distributed in the towns as follows: Chambersburg, 800; Waynesboro, 300; Mercersburg, 121; Greencastle, 66, with a half-hundred cases in the outlying districts.

Probably not more than a dozen cases are reported in this county, and none of them is worse than the ordinary case of grip. The real truth is, that it differs but little from the form of grip with which we have been more or less familiar for several years, with the exception, that it seems to be in a more virulent form this season, just as scarlet fever and other diseases are worse some seasons than others.

Just now, it stands one in hand to be careful; there is a strong tendency for the disease to run into pneumonia, and terminate fatally.

Keep away from crowds, and do not unnecessarily expose yourself. If you have a cough, use a handkerchief, and do not snort the vapor from your lungs all over every one near you; avoid spitting on the sidewalk, in public halls, or on the floor in the parlor.

Use plenty of common sense, and if you, or any member of your family, become infected, do your best to keep from spreading it to your neighbors.

It is believed that with the approach of frosty weather, that there will be a subsidence of the epidemic.

San Jose Scale.

Attention to the spread of San Jose scale in the orchards in the northern and western parts of Pennsylvania is called by Professor J. G. Sanders, Economic Zoologist of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

Professor Sanders in a recent visit through the north and west sections found many orchards were being destroyed by the scale. Thousands of trees on farms and in orchards have been attacked.

Professor Sanders says that the farmers and orchardists relying on natural enemies and parasites to destroy the San Jose scale are being deluded and that in order to save their trees they must at once plan for a systematic program of dormant sprays.
